What Came of a Woman's Hat.
By ETHEL MARSH.
[Copyright, 1908, by American Press Association.]

Tom Buxton got into a parlor car, put his belongings in the rack above him, took a newspaper out of his pocket and settled himself to endure a journey. Before opening the paper he made a hasty survey of the car. At the other end were several uninteresting looking people, in the center an old woman and a boy, but on the opposite side, slightly in advance of him, in a chair whose back was turned toward him, was something that arrested his attention. It was a feminine hat. It was to be seen above the back of the chair and indicated a woman beneath. It was the work of an artist.
Its rim, nearly a yard in diameter, was topped by several splendid black ostrich feathers springing from a profusion of bands and buckles that had been thrown together in an extraordinary combination. Such hats are only to be associated with beautiful women.

The next thing for Buxton was to get a view of the owner of the hat, but as she persistently kept her face toward the window this was impossible. After a long wait for her to change her position he arose and walked toward the forward vestibule, then sauntered back. To his discomfort, the lady had changed her position, her face being toward the opposite end of the car. As he passed her she turned again toward the window. He kept on toward the rear vestibule, went into the smoking room, came out and walked to his chair. The lady had swung around to face forward.

Buxton said something without moving his lips.
For fear of appearing obstructive he swung his chair around and looked out of the window. When he swung it back the lady was facing the front of the car, her head was resting on the cushion, and she held a folder time table over her face. She was apparently resting or slumbering. The shapely hand that held the folder was delicately gloved, and a bit of lace fell from the wrist. The figure was shapely and the position one of graceful repose.

"Confound it!" exclaimed Buxton mentally. "Why can't I get a glimpse of her face? If it corresponds to the rest of her she must be a Venus." But fortune did not seem to favor him. She remained in her half reclining position under his admiring gaze for nearly an hour, while the delicious odor of a bunch of violets she wore on her bosom was continually wafted to him. Then she moved slightly.
Buxton hoped. But, alas, before lowering the folder she turned her face toward the window.

Buxton said things again without moving his lips.
But the conductor is coming to penetrate the flocks. He stops in the middle of the car to explain something to the old woman with the boy, and it seems half an hour before he makes her understand. Buxton grows restless with impatience. The ticket puncher comes on, and when he reaches the lady's chair she laughingly extends her hand sideways without turning. Her ticket is punched, the conductor moves on, and again Buxton is disappointed.

What a singular series of coincidences that the lady should have happened for an hour and a half away to be in such position that Buxton could not see her features! "I wonder," he said, "if she isn't a very homebody woman who is keeping her face away from me on purpose. But she hasn't seen me. She was sitting in that position when I came in, and her back has been toward me ever since. No; I can feel it in my very bones that she is beautiful."

He was now ready for an aggressive movement. He arose and, going to the chair next to hers, sat down. After a brief gaze out of the window he turned his eyes toward her. He was too late. She had turned her back.
Suddenly, without warning, her chair swung around, and she faced him squarely.

"Julia!"
"Tom!"
A pause.

"I've been trying to get a glimpse of your face all the morning."

"I know it. I could see you in the mirror beside the window. Why should you try to see me after all that has passed?"

"I thought you were the present chance. I've been failing in love ever since I boarded this train."

"I trust you won't treat the lady as you treated me."

"And I trust she won't treat me as you did. But that's past. I give you it was all my fault anyway."

"I have come to the conclusion that it was all mine. But it's too late now.
The divorce proceedings are drawing to a conclusion, a great deal of money has been spent, and if we 'make up' it will all have been for nothing."

"Well, if that isn't like a"—He checked himself. He had learned wisdom. He continued, "A reconciliation under the circumstances would be unwarranted—a pecuniary absurdity—if I had not made ten times the amount involved in stocks while the suit has been pending."

"In that case I suppose—"

"Suppose what?"

"That since the divorce has not been granted there would be no impropriety in our taking a—"

"Honey-moon trip? None whatever.
We'll continue the journey as a newly married couple."

The summer school of the university of Vermont will open Monday, July 15, and close Saturday, August 7. On account of the thirtieth anniversary celebration of opening is one week later than it would have been.

The summer session is intended primarily to meet the needs of teachers, principals, supervisors and others engaged more or less directly in school work. The curriculum contains much also suited to the needs of undergraduates wishing to do work which may count towards college credits, and of graduates who may be looking forward to an advanced degree.

Instruction will be given in Greek, Latin, English, German, mathematics, pedagogy, agriculture, manual training and home economics. Other studies may also be pursued by special arrangements with instructors.

Instruction will be given by members of the university faculty, also by Prof.
A. H. Gilbert of the Kentucky state university and Prin. C. H. Morrill of the Randolph normal school.

A bulletin giving detailed information may be had on request addressed to the university, Burlington.

ABOUT THE STATE

Acts as a Bar to Profitable Employment.
You cannot afford to grow old.
In these days of strenuous competition it is necessary to maintain, as long as possible, one's youthful appearance.
It is impossible to do this without retaining a luxuriant growth of hair.

The presence of Dandruff indicates the presence of a burrowing germ which lives and thrives on the roots of the hair until it causes total baldness.
Newell's Herculene is the only known destroyer of this pest, and it is as effective as it is delightful to use.
Herculene makes an elegant hair dressing as well as Dandruff cure.
Accept no substitute—there is none.
Sold by leading druggists. Send for information for sample to The Herculene Co., Detroit, Mich.

One Dollar Bottles Guaranteed.

Notice.
All persons are strictly forbidden from trespassing upon my land, which is located between the Intercity hall ground and the Central Vermont and Wells River railroad tracks, and which I own except crossing said land will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

WAS GOING TO FAIRLEE.

Rev. Thomas McKay Who Died in Everett, Mass., Recently.

Everett, Mass., June 3.—Several hundred people from the various churches of this city and the Y. M. C. A. gathered in the Glendale Methodist church at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, when the funeral services for Rev. Thomas McKay of 6 Elm street, this city, took place.
Mr. McKay was unattached, but had rendered service of much value to the various churches, especially during the recent revival campaign, winning the hearts of all he met.

Rev. Fred M. Estes of the Glendale M. E. church officiated. Mr. McKay having been a member of that church. Rev.
William I. Sweet of the First Congregational church and Rev. George N.
Washburn of the Courtland Congregational church of South Everett assisted Mr. Estes. The favorite hymns of Mr.
McKay were sung at the service. Many flowers covered the casket, one piece from the church being especially beautiful. The body was taken last night to Camden, where burial will take place in Toronto.

Mr. McKay was to have taken charge of a church in Fairlee, Vt., next Sunday. A wife and five children survive.
